WBAI TO BROADCAST LIVE FROM WASHINGTON, D.C. APRIL 25th

During the month of April, WBAI will devote much of its programming to issues involving U.S. policy in Central America and southern Africa.

As the National Mobilization for Peace and Justice in Central America and southern Africa moves towards its historic conclusion in Washington on April 25th, WBAI will provide timely updates on organizing efforts, both locally and nationally.

Every Tuesday morning at 7:35, tune in for the New York Mobilization update. Mobilization coordinators will also be taking your phone calls on public affairs specials, scheduled throughout the month.

The Reverend Allan Boesak, Randall Robinson, and journalist Les Payne are but a few of the voices you'll hear speaking out on southern Africa.

Many solidarity organizations, including the Pledge of Resistance, The Committee in Solidarity with the People of El Salvador (CISPES), Somos Hermanas, and the Peace and Solidarity Alliance, will be featured on WBAI's "Worldwatch."

The New York coordinators for the march include: Cleveland Robinson of the United Auto Workers' District 65, City Council Member Wendell Foster, and Connie Hogarth of Westchester People's Action Coalition (WESTPAC).

They are convening several large meetings at Local 1199 of the Health and Hospital Employees Union, to begin mobilizing for the April Demonstration. For further information, call (212) 777-1730.

And don't forget: if you can't make it to Washington on April 25th, WBAI will be broadcasting live from the rally site. Check your Folio for dates and times of WBAI's April Mobilization programming.

BRING ON THE BAND! Al Angeloro in his "club"

There's nothing canned about Al Angeloro's show

By ALAN MIRABELLA

Live music on the radio might seem an ancient idea these days, but every weekend on WBAI, Al Angeloro springs that long-retired practice back into action. With his show, "Live From Studio A" (Saturdays, 8:30–10:30 pm, 99.5-FM), Angeloro presents little-heard dance music from all over the world, bringing a series of heart-pounding sounds onto the air that create a two-hour dance party for listeners.

"This is music that's not heard anywhere in New York City," says Angeloro, who's worked 12 years in New York radio at WRVR, WKHK, WYNY and WNBC, where he currently hosts a controversial late-night talk show on Sundays. "It's heavily Afro-Cuban, West-African (soukous), French-West Caribbean (zouke); music from Haiti, the Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico.

"And it's dance music," he says. "There's no pretense. It's all spontaneous, nothing is taped. It's of the moment."

Once a practicing attorney and administrative law judge, Angeloro took his idea of a live show to WBAI about a year ago, when he got bored with consulting and teaching.

He's been at it ever since, booking groups for his shows and heading to the studio armed with two tote bags of dance records from his own collection to play in between band sets and on those nights when groups can't be booked.

"What I'm looking to create is the ambience of a club," says Angeloro, 42, a music enthusiast who's loved all types of music since he was a kid. "I'm trying to get as close to that feeling as possible because I knew that there's nothing like that on the dial."

To do that, Angeloro literally transforms the usually quiet WBAI studios into a club.

On a recent Saturday evening, a fabulous eight-piece charanga band, Charanson, piled into the boxlike studio. In addition to Angeloro, there were a few friends of the band and some dedicated listeners who stopped by. There was even an open bar of sorts—listener Tony Guzman brought a bottle of homemade coquito (a spiked coconut drink).

Then for a solid hour Charanson played their music with an island feel, only stopping to accept applause and for a few crucial announcements like that Max Salazar couldn't make it because his car battery froze and that it was Junior and Nancy Rivera's wedding anniversary.

If you get the idea that the show is a fun, spontaneous happening—well, you should. But, he says, the only reason it works is because listeners have a need for it.

One problem, he says, is that Latin stations "think this music is only for Hispanics. But there are whites, blacks, and English-speaking New York Hispanics who love the music I play, and they're an enormous audience that's being totally ignored."

So instead of the "same sounding" merengue and ballads that are played on the Latin outlets, Angeloro sees his show as a vibrant alternative. "It's music with a much broader scope," he says. "And I think it's a real breath of fresh air on the radio."

WBAI PROGRAM ENTERS BROADCASTING MUSEUM

KATHY DOBKIN'S CLASSIC PRODUCTION OF TOLSTOY'S 'WAR AND PEACE' WAS PRODUCED AT STATION

The Museum of Broadcasting plans to add "War and Peace," produced by WBAI's Kathy Dobkin and Milton Hoffman, to its permanent collection.

"War and Peace," a continuous reading of the Tolstoi novel, was broadcast over four days on WBAI in 1970. Hundreds of readers participated, including station staff members, listeners, and notables such as Morris Carnovsky, Conrad Lynn, Bennett Cerf, William F. Buckley, and Alexandra Tolstoi, the author's daughter, among others.

The broadcast was a major New York City event, with articles in all of the daily newspapers, international coverage, and special showings of the film version of "War and Peace" as benefits for WBAI.

Following the four-day airing of "War and Peace" (interrupted only for the news and the WBAI war summary), the station broadcast the novel in daily segments over the course of the following year.

Kathy Dobkin worked at WBAI for many years as a producer, FOLIO editor, and administrator. She is also a former member of the station board.

"War and Peace" is the first program produced at a Pacifica station to be included in the Museum of Broadcasting.
